

WHY UN INSPECTORS LEFT IRAQ: WHAT A DIFFERENCE FOUR YEARS MAKES

The media system bares a lot of guilt in leading this nation into war. The following quotes show how facts got twisted by a media system eager for war. The following quotes were compiled by Jim Naureckas. •

Associated Press

"The chief UN weapons inspector ordered his monitors to leave Baghdad today."

Los Angeles Times

"Immediately after submitting his report on Baghdad's noncompliance, Butler ordered his inspectors to leave Iraq."

— December 17, 1998

"It is not known whether Iraq has rebuilt clandestine nuclear facilities since UN inspectors were forced out in 1998."

— September 10, 2002

National Public Radio

"The United Nations once again has ordered its weapons inspectors out of Iraq."

— December 16, 1998

"If [Saddam Hussein] has secret weapons, he's had four years since he kicked out the inspectors to hide all of them."

— August 3, 2002

Newsday

"Butler abruptly pulled all of his inspectors out of Iraq."

— December 17, 1998

"[Saddam Hussein] kicked them out in 1998, and they dismantled whatever weapons they found."

IRAQ WAR ISSUE

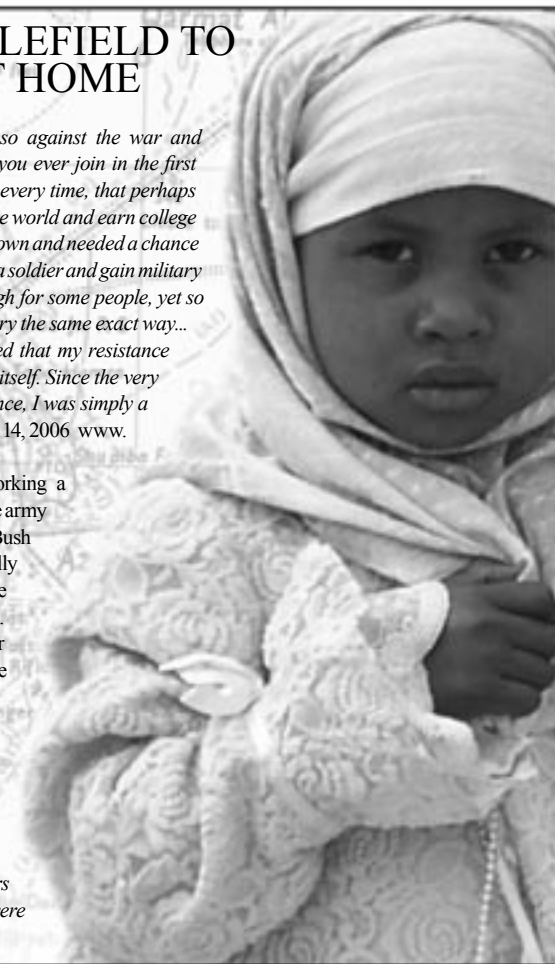

FROM THE BATTLEFIELD TO THE WAR AT HOME

People often ask me, 'If you are so against the war and couldn't stand the army, why did you ever join in the first place?' I have answered the same every time, that perhaps I was naïve, that I wanted a chance to see the world and earn college money. Or that I felt trapped in a dead-end town and needed a chance to escape, or that I was curious to live life as a soldier and gain military knowledge. These answers are never enough for some people, yet so many young Americans end up in the military the same exact way... After much personal debate, I have learned that my resistance to war and empire was forged by the army itself. Since the very beginning of my four year military experience, I was simply a very different soldier." — Saturday, January 14, 2006 www.ftsoldier.blogspot.com

With no money for college and working a mundane job at Home Depot, Jeff decided the army was a quick ticket out. Although he knew Bush II wasn't so great, Jeff wasn't very politically aware at the time. A stint in the army made for inexpensive flying and money for college. Grand Junction was the perfect catalyst for recruitment by the military and he could see why kids decided to join in 2001. From the beginning, Jeff's dislike for authority and his problem with conformity got him into trouble.

"But it was the army that molded my contempt for authority and distrust of a feudalistic government that pulls the strings. Through my army involvement I met others like me who felt much of the same way. We were dissidents, but never un-American. On the contrary, we knew the difference between following orders and thinking for ourselves. Ultimately, there is no difference between love for one's country and the willingness to oppose a government that institutes war, fear and oppression on any level. There are many soldiers and veterans who share the same feelings as me and others I met along the way. Some are even in the ranks of the military. Someday all the soldiers will come home and when they do, their stories and sentiments will follow. Only then will a better understanding of the truth be known."—January 14, 2006

Jeff was part of a six man calvary scout team and roommates with Garrett Reppenhagen (see The Red Pill, Vol. 4, No. 3 February 2006). Jeff began reading a lot of books and became aware of US hegemony and foreign policies. By the time he was sent to Iraq, Jeff felt the Iraq War was mainly about controlling Mid-Eastern oil. One of the first things Jeff noticed when he went to Iraq were the asinine things they were required to do, such as escorting Halliburton's private contractors. He didn't feel they were helping the local people, they were getting shot at and he was increasingly frustrating with, not only this war, but his participation in it.

"Today's public thinks that every American soldier fighting in Iraq supports the war and that his/her morale and trust in command is very high. However, in my experience, this was simply not true. I encountered dissent on many levels . . . Even soldiers who supported the army and loved their job hated being in a conflict they could not understand. Some soldiers did understand, and were resentful for it."—Saturday, January 14, 2006

Starting the blog was definitely therapeutic to a degree and allowed Jeff to communicate what he was going through. "It felt good to reflect on what was going on," Jeff said. Jeff participated in the battle of Fallujah and was one of the first to attest to the use of the chemical weapon, White Phosphorous (modern-day napalm), in Fallujah. The army wasn't really sure how to deal with him at the time, moreover, there were 'under the table' repercussions, such as bad guard duties, or bad details.

"When I joined the United States Army I swore an oath to 'serve and protect the Constitution of the United States', not an ignorant greedy little fuck like George Bush or any of his court jesters in the White House. And by writing and speaking against his policies and his war and his grossly high death tolls, I know in my heart that I am still, to this day, fighting to protect all the constitutional rights that his administration is robbing from us everyday."—Wednesday, September 14, 2005

When Jeff got back to the states, he got involved with the Iraq Veterans Against the War. He continued working and speaking out against the war—this time openly. "If we really want the war to end, we have to stand up and speak up," Jeff said. He feels that it is imperative for vets to stand up and encourage others. It is their responsibility to open the eyes and the ears of the public. "The problem with the antiwar movement," he said, "is that it lacks a strong enough veteran base." Although, it is growing every day. Jeff attended several protests when he got back, including one in Washington, D.C. in September 2004, where he marched with IVAW as well as the anti-authoritarian Black Bloc.

"My involvement in the Iraq war is over and done, but my experience there is something that I will live with and work through for the rest of my life. I will carry the shame and degradation of probably every soldier who is forced to fight against his common man and against his will, but I shall not let these burdens drag me down. My goal from now on is to overcome the adversity of violence and decadence that is so Privatization is obviously something we have been giving a lot of thought to . . . Everybody knows we cannot wait until there is an elected government to start economic reform."

THE NEOLIBERALIZATION OF IRAQ

Paul Bremer, former head of the Coalition Provisional Authority—July 8, 2003

Three years ago the American people were sold a war with Iraq, using false, flawed and fixed intelligence. None of the hyped weapons of mass destruction have been found. If WMD's weren't the reason for going to war, what was?

Beside the obvious oil factor, I propose that privatization and economic neocolonialism were driving forces behind the invasion and occupation of Iraq.

Paul Bremer, named Director of Reconstruction and Humanitarian Assistance following the invasion, replaced Jay Garner on May 6, 2003. In his position as head of the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA), Bremer was able to restructure much of Iraq's economy. He did so in 100 little known Orders. Officially, sovereignty was transferred from the CPA to the Iraqi Government, but the interim constitution of Iraq, drafted by the US-appointed Iraqi Governing Council (IGC), makes it nearly impossible for the Iraqi government to overturn any of Bremer's 100 Orders. Many of these Orders ensure that America will maintain economic and political control over Iraq for the foreseeable future.

Order #12 suspended all tariffs, customs, duties, import taxes, fees, and all other trade restrictions.

Order #17 grants foreign contractors, including private security firms, full immunity from Iraq's laws.

Order #57 and #77 ensures US control of the Iraqi government by mandating that US appointed auditors and inspector generals be placed in every government ministry.

Order #39 allows for: (1) privatization of Iraq's 200 state-owned industries; (2) 100% foreign ownership of Iraqi businesses; (3) "national treatment" which means that no preference for local business over foreign; (4) unrestricted, tax-free remittance of all profits and other funds; (5) 40-year ownership licenses.

Order #40 switches the Iraqi banking sector from a state-run to a market-driven system, and allows foreign banks to own up to 50% Iraqi banks.

Order #49 drops the tax rate for corporations from 40% to 15%.

Order #81 prohibits Iraqi farmers from saving seeds, thus placing them under the thumb of major biotech companies like Monsanto.

At the time of the invasion, Iraq was the most heavily socialized country in the world. Every bank, factory, and major industry was owned by the state. Bremer's orders have allowed American companies to make millions buying up Iraqi companies. Foreign companies operating in Iraq have no obligation to hire

Bremer signing sovereignty over to the IGC.

Iraqis or to keep any of the profits in the country. It is in essence systematic legalized theft.

Bremer's 100 Orders are also illegal. In the US, any treaty that is ratified becomes the 'supreme law of the land.' The transformation of an occupied country's laws violates the Hague regulations of 1907, which the US ratified. Bremer's Orders also run contrary to the US Army's Law of Land Warfare.

The illegal nature of this whole operation was confirmed when British attorney general, Lord Goldsmith, warned PM Tony Blair, in a leaked memo, that "major structural economic reforms would not be authorized by international law." • followers at his command. An estimated 1 million plus people look to him as inspiration in his corner of Baghdad, where he provides services which the U.S. military cannot, thanks to Bush's refusal to listen to the many experts that serve in the U.S. military and foreign service positions.

Sergeant Noboa feels that he had a positive time serving in the military and serving his country in that capacity for six and a half years. While he believes democracy is an ideal that should be spread throughout the world, he understands that democracy cannot be forced upon a people with an M-16. "A country must decide for itself that a democracy is what they want, not have it decided for them," Noboa said.

Sergeant Rafe Noboa, a writer, student, and political activist, is scheduled to speak on Saturday, March 25, 2006 at 2:00PM at Lincoln park. RAFE NOBOA SPEAKS OUT

Since the creation of this country, dissent has always been a past time of patriots and concerned citizens. Dissent helped to create this country and it was a tool for change during the civil rights movement. Again, the flag of protest has been raised by a patriot with a family record of military service stretching back to the Spanish-American war.

Rafe Noboa, a six and a half year veteran of the Army and a man who served in the Iraq War for a year and a handful of months, is scheduled to speak at Lincoln Park on March 25, 2006 at 2:00 PM. The event, in commemoration of the third anniversary of the Iraq war, is intended to show the error of the U.S. invasion and the error of those who took the U.S. to war.

During his time in Iraq, former Sergeant Noboa saw first hand the horrible effects that war can have on civilians and soldiers alike. His response was one

Noboa saw first hand the bungling and ineptitude of the Bush administration's handling of Iraq. The administration's concept of 'winning the hearts and minds' of the Iraqi people, seemed absurd to Noboa, who dealt with a people who had lost the majority of their infrastructure, government, and security overnight. He saw that the price of the war is far too costly of a thing for both the U.S. and Iraq. In a country divided by tribal, religious, and other affiliations, a war for the installment of a democracy when the basic necessities of life are lacking seemed odd. Who has the time to worry about party affiliations and soap boxes when one's entire life was shattered after a decade of sanctions and then a war? On the U.S. side, we have a skyrocketing national debt along with hundreds of thousands of veterans who are often brushed underneath the rug and out of sight once they return. We are still paying the price for WW II, and now with government cuts to veterans care to pay for of disbelief as the country and the President rushed into a war without the slightest respect paid towards diplomacy and humanitarian responsibility. "War should always be the last resort of the diplomatic process, not the first." Sergeant Noboa said, a point he reiterated many times during the course of our interview. He was especially shocked at the lack of citizens and congressmen not voicing their outrage against such a costly and erroneous war. "People are scared to voice their worries about this war," he said, "thanks to the prevalent belief in this country that protest is unpatriotic, when in reality it is one of the most patriotic things that people can do."

As a forward observer for his artillery unit at night, and a civil affairs representative during the day, the occupation of Iraq, who will take care of those men and women who were forced to wage a war that makes little sense to anybody, except to the Bush Administration?

Noboa saw the Army crippled in its rebuilding roles thanks to the lack of troops, and the lack of security that more troops could've have provided. "In war, people are often attracted to the most extreme leaders, hoping for someone to protect their lives and livelihood." Noboa said, to help explain the massive amounts of sectarian violence which has been erupting in Iraq lately. This can also explain the rise of a powerful personality such as Muqtada al-Sadr, a religious leader who has thousands of Shi'ite prevalent in our society. The weapons I choose to fight this battle are communication, peaceful resolution, and complete understanding. The war is now on all fronts, and for me the real war is ending the one in Iraq. I feel I owe it to the victims of this horrible conflict, both the freedom fighters and innocent families on both sides of the spectrum. I simply cannot sit down and allow greed mongers and war hawks to run our countries and govern our lives any longer. I have decided to do my share, collectively with others, to bring this tyrannical administration to its knees through words and acts of civil disobedience. If we allow the bastards to take a little more, soon enough they will have it all. The time has come to stop the madness."—Monday, August 22, 2005

Jeff currently resides in Colorado Springs working closely with an anarchist collective community in its beginning stages. The community features a bike shop, a growing critical mass, direct action, a community garden-utilizing gray water, an info shop, vegan dinners, and of course, kick ball.

"So I suppose things are looking brighter everyday, although the proof may not be so obvious at the moment. I get the feeling that with every passing moment the great Pendulum of Fate is starting to swing back to the left. More and more people are becoming aware that we are being conned and fooled into believing the deranged lies of crooks and criminals in Washington, DC. There seems to be less support in taking the lives of innocent Iraqis and having the blood of brave American soldiers calculated into the prices at the gas pumps. I still firmly believe that progressive change cannot happen until we hit rock bottom, and although it potentially can get much worse, I can't see all the good people in the world allowing it to happen."

As incredibly bad as the army can be at times, it did teach me some very valuable lessons. One is that just because someone with authority is "in charge", that doesn't necessarily mean that person is Right, or even a Good person. Not every order handed down is based off of good moral pretexts, and many times the outcome of immoral orders makes the situation as a whole much worse. Eventually common sense, self respect, and real honor for first-rate decency must prevail. Whether you are subjected to the draconian structure of the military or that of our pernicious government, honest dissidence should always remain constant. In the words of the wise Timothy Leary, "Think for yourself; question authority."—Monday, August 22, 2005 •

BUSH, OUR WAR PRESIDENT

With Bush, it's 'Res ipso loquitor'; the thing speaks for itself."—Hunter S. Thompson

George W. Bush has made a lot of hay calling himself "the War President." When it comes to his leadership style with the Iraq War, Bush is no F.D.R. or J.F.K., he's more of a Johnson, or a Nixon. Maybe even, as suspended Cherry Creek social studies teacher, Jay Bennis stated, it is not a bad intellectual exercise to compare Bush to the early years of Hitler. After all, this wisdom comes from a politically persecuted educator.

For starters, Bush has a strong family history of Nazi collaboration. His grandfather, Prescott Bush's Union Bank was financing the Third Reich until its assets got seized in 1942 for "trading with the enemy." All you doubting Thomas, savvy web-surfers can verify this by looking up Alien Property Custodian, Leo T. Crowley, "vesting order number 248."

It is further folly to compare Bush to Hitler, because of the way they look on paper. Unlike Bush, Hitler actually did combat duty for his country, got elected with no controversy or allegations of voting fraud, and Hitler allowed the Red Cross into his secret prisoner of war camps.

Bush got caught using the NSA to spy on his political enemies and others, at first lying and denying this, then admitting it a few days later. Furthermore, he began bragging about it, ultimately boasting that he was going to continue to do so as often and as long as he pleased. This could mean YOU!

Can we compare our war congress to the Reichstag? Well, our congress refuses to even launch an investigation into this obvious constitutional breach; it settled for a sub-committee of only seven members who will be briefed sporadically about the spying program, but are under gag-orders. Now they seek to legalize Bush's eavesdropping. If what Bush did is legalized, then we will have truly legalized a police state against ourselves.

Bush, the war president, all ready passed the USA PATRIOT Act. To refresh your memory, the PATRIOT Act allows the F.B.I. to sneak into your house and peek around, all without a warrant. Also included in the rape of your privacy is, mail, e-mail, your medical records, your business records, your therapy and counseling records, your school records, your credit card records, and records of your checkouts at the library and video store. If you are so naive as to not realize that all of this is being used to collect dossiers on potential political enemies of the state, you're probably naive enough to believe that the electronic voting machines we use—that are owned by high-ranking Republicans—are fair and accurate. Our war president has spotted the enemy, and it is us.

Our war president has ordered targeted assassinations, mass arrests of immigrants (remember the Jews in 1939?), abductions, torture and renditions, illegal prisons in Guantanamo and Abu Ghraib, and even some secret torture facilities in Eastern Europe. All of these things taken together do not point to a thriving, benevolent bastion of democracy and freedom.

Before we move on, let's remember the mysterious "no fly" list and the recruitment of civilian postal workers, truckers, and utility workers to spy on U.S. citizens, the blacklisting of protesters, and the caged-in 'free speech zones' the war president sets up outside his highly staged managed public appearances in front of hand-picked audiences.

Our press is bought and paid for, literally. At least two TV pundits, three radio hosts, and seven newspaper and magazine reporters have admitted taking administration money to report favorably on the war president's plans and proposals. Can you tell when a reporter is telling you the truth, and when they are merely spreading disinformation for money?

Fascism is more correctly called corporatism, when corporations call the shots, who do you think has more power to influence the government, you, or Exxon and Halliburton? Our war president is a corporate shill, selling our future off to the highest bidders. Is the end of one man, one vote, for outright corporate rule far behind?

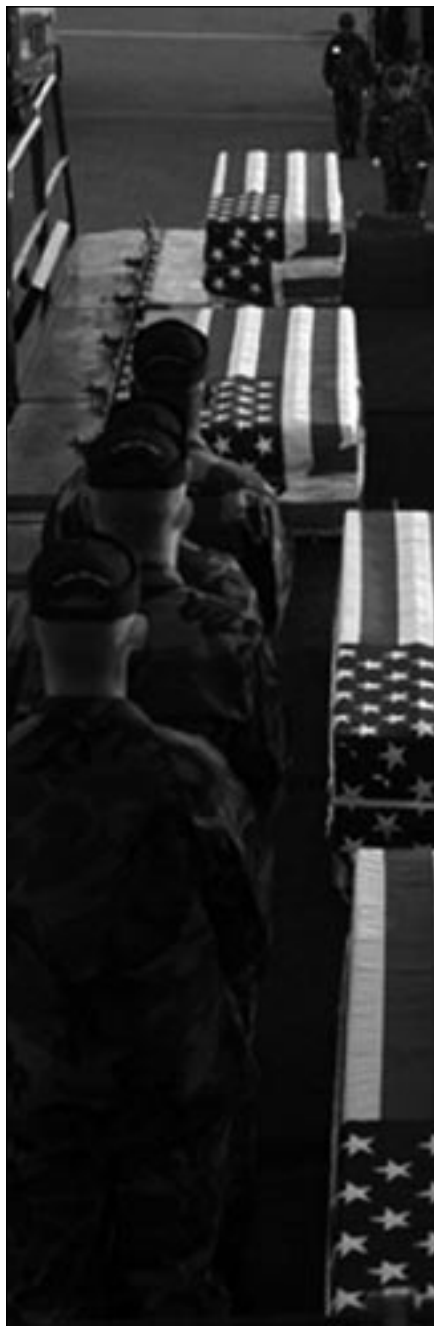

Our war president has failed miserably if he has been attempting to lead us back to our glory. He has not missed an opportunity to foment fear in our society, and to capitalize on it. In this element of the war, the 'terrorists' have won. Americans, by and large, have proven more than willing to consent to fascist ways, to change our formerly free way of life.

Jay Bennish got into trouble for merely suggesting that there are connections between the way Hitler started and the way Bush has managed the wars in Afghanistan, Iraq, and elsewhere. The Nazis didn't take over Germany overnight simply because of their illegal war of aggression on Poland, and the Bush corporate fascists haven't completely taken over the U.S. simply because of our illegal war of aggression against Iraq (what WMDs?).

But the point is well taken. Jay Bennish, a representative of concerned educators throughout the country, has done the prudent and responsible thing by pointing out that 'the emperor is naked,' so to speak. Do we support Bennish and his attempt to teach our young citizens to think critically, or do we go back to sleep and allow him to be trampled underfoot by an idiot boy king war president and his minions? Our children and grandchildren will be watching. •

HISTORY OF MODERN IRAQ

During World War I, the British invaded and conquered Baghdad in 1917, then a part of the Ottoman Empire. Post World War I saw the State of Iraq carved out of the former Ottoman Empire. Iraq, under British control and mandate, was complete with a puppet monarchy comprised of the Sunni minority known as the Hashimites. From 1920 to 1922, there were many revolts against the puppet monarchy that were responded to with British gas and air attacks upon the Iraqi people. In 1927, huge oil reserves were discovered and exploited by Iraqi Petroleum Company, a British enterprise.

British Troops in Iraq, 1917.

In 1932, the British mandate ended, and King Ghazi claimed Iraq sovereignty over Kuwait. 1945, saw an unsuccessful Kurdish rebellion. From 1948 to 1949, Iraq and other Arab nations were engaged in a war on the newly established state of Israel. The result of the war was a devastated Iraqi economy. In 1956, Iraq joined the Baghdad Pact with Turkey, Iran, Pakistan, the United States, and the United Kingdom. The Hashimite monarchy of Iraq was overthrown on July 14th, 1958, and the king was publicly executed. In 1961, Iraq contested the declaration of Independence of Kuwait, claiming it was part of their territory. The US enlisted Saddam Hussein on the CIA payroll, in 1959, as part of a covert operation to assassinate the then Iraqi Prime Minister, General Abd al-Karim Qasim (Robert Perry, Missing US-Iraq History, "In These Times," December 2003). The assassination of Qasim was unsuccessful, and in 1963, John F. Kennedy approved a government plan to overthrow Qasim's government. At the time, Qasim was working toward socializing Iraq's oil industry (Kurt Nimmo, Taking Out the Trash, 2003). In 1968, the secular Ba'ath Party overthrew and executed Qasim and took power of Iraq. During this time Hussein was the secretary-general of the secular Ba'ath Party.

In 1979, Hussein was able to rise to power upon the back of the CIA who aided him in securing military support. In the 1980's, relations between Iran and Iraq were heated by border disputes. In August 1980, Hussein met with President Carter in Saudi Arabia. In the meeting, Carter and the Saudi government encouraged Hussein to "bring the fight to Iran's fundamentalist regime," giving Iraq "the green light" to initiate war with Iran. In September of 1980, Iraq invaded Iran. In 1982, Iran was pulling ahead in the conflict. This is when President Reagan, and his administration, begun supplying Hussein under-the-table. The weapons and technology that were transferred to Iraq from the US had dual uses; meaning that they could be used to produce and deliver chemical weapons. Not only did we supply weapons, and a means for creating chemical weapons, but we offered military support with satellite surveillance (Perry). In September 2002, Newsweek reported that during this time the Reagan administration had also sold Hussein computer databases to track down political and trade channels to acquire the materiel for making Anthrax (Perry). In 1992, Murray Waas and Craig Unger wrote for the New Yorker about Bush Sr., then Vice President, encouraging Hussein to increase aggression against Iran in the 80's.

By the end of the Iraq-Iran war in 1988, Iraq's economy was in shambles once again. At this time the Iraqi mentality still thought of Kuwait as a part of Iraq. Hussein, agitated by Kuwait's refusal to grant a 10 billion dollar loan to Iraq, contacted the United States, who told him the US had no interest in Kuwait. Hussein interpreted this to be an 'okay' to invading Kuwait. What followed was the first Gulf War in 1991.

When Bush Jr. was elected in 2001, one of his first acts was to block the release of sensitive documentation from the Reagan-Bush era. After 9/11, Bush Jr. allowed former presidents, vice-presidents, and their families to block the release of similar documentation. (Perry). In March 2003, based upon faulty intelligence that Hussein had weapons of mass destruction, and links to Al-Qiada, the United States invaded Iraq. On May 1st, 2003, Bush Jr. boldly declared, "Mission Accomplished" on international television. Three years later we are still occupying Iraq, and a war with Iran seems to be coming like a train wreck. Are the pieces of the puzzle fitting together yet? •
