

A.N.T. ATTACKS FOX

At twelve o'clock on Thursday, April 1st, a representative for the organization Ants Not Tyrants, or A.N.T., announced that the occupation of Fox Media Studios in Grand Junction would finally be brought to a peaceful conclusion. "We've accomplished our goals, and in doing so, we've been able to subsist on the finest trash America has to offer," said #1387293640, acting as delegate for A.N.T., which unlawfully entered Fox Media Studios on December 8, 2009 and remained embedded in the floor boards there until Thursday, running all programs covertly and inundating the public with their mindless propaganda.

A.N.T. was formed in May 2009 when troops from the Queen of the Fire Ants snuck into the burrow of the Licorice Ants and usurped their Queen before the drones had time to react. The delegate for A.N.T., who happened to be a Licorice Ant, admitted on Thursday that no one knew what exactly the definitive purpose behind the occupation was, other than pleasing the queen. The Fire Ant Queen, languishing in putrid grandeur as she sucked a mildewed scrap of frosting and farted impossible larvae out of her exquisite bunghole, commented, "They do what I tell them. Their existence is entirely dependent on mine, as my existence hinges totally on them, though, in the end, I really have no idea why we exist at all. The workers use their pleasureless lives gathering food for me and my horrid venture through reality is spent locked in this abominable body shitting out filthy little uncaring grubs."

Rodger Didlysquat, Master of Bile for the Fox Media Corporation, said that no one had any idea that the ants had been running the show. "We didn't notice that anything had changed."

You Said It

Everyone who bitched about the city not plowing the snow, get a plow. Snow removal is socialism.

Thanks to the city for finally cleaning up some of the radioactive waste under Main St. It was about time, don't you think?

Why does the city keep building roundabouts? Nobody here knows how to use them. Just the other day I saw seven people catatonic driving endlessly around and around at 7th and Main. It's just too hard.

Some lefty douche bag was telling me that we don't have any culture here in Grand Junction, and I said, "What about Speedo Man?"

To everyone who is criticizing Obama for not ending the wars, or for giving trillions to big corporations, or for failing to close Guantanamo, etc., be patient. He inherited a big mess.

Stop questioning the police. It is standard procedure to move bodies. Don't believe everything you see on CSI.

Tea Party 2012. Enough said.

CALL TO INACTION

The Blue Pill wants you not to worry your pretty little head about any of the issues of the world, and encourages every good American to do their part in the war on terror by going back to sleep, watching TV, and buying shit. The Blue Pill is a cooperative partnership between the Department of Homeland Security and MegaCorp® Media that publishes only what the mainstream media and the Government censors allow.

The Blue Pill and all articles and images herein are copyrighted material. Any unauthorized reproduction is prohibited and punishable by Federal Law by up to $100,000 fine and/or five years in prison. DO NOT PHOTOCOPY, OR DISTRIBUTE!

GO BACK TO SLEEP!

ANY TOWN
USA

The Blue Pill®

APRIL

FOOLS

APRIL 2010

VOL. 8 NO. 4

TSA CREATES 5,000 BREAST AND BUTTOCKS SQUEEZING JOBS

The Transportation Security Agency (TSA) has admitted to systematic failure in its dangerous dealings with the Christmas Day bomber. As you recall, this was the situation where a plane on its way to Detroit had its passengers overcome and subdue a South Asian man who was attempting to light his buttocks on fire. The perpetrator was transferred to the FBI who quickly discovered he had plastic explosives plastered all over his rear.

The TSA blamed its failure to detect the butt-bomb on a lack of money, resources and power. "Let's face it. Our no fly list isn't much. We need tools, money and manpower," said TSA spokesman Steve Cock. He went on to explain a vital new technique to be employed immediately at American airports.

"No one will pass without a firm squeeze on the buttocks," said Cock. Cock went on to say that after some training, his organization would be turning to a developing threat: breasts. "Jihadists have been known to place explosives over their breasts, and that will soon stop."

Women can expect their breasts and buttocks' to be firmly squeezed prior to boarding. No one on a plane need dread anymore the nightmarish exploding breast scenario.

TSA expects to hire 5000 new agents for this task. Persons who are interested in squeezing breasts and buttocks' for a living are lightly encouraged to apply at www.tsa.gov.

"It's all about safety."
—TSA Officer Steve Cock—

CARBONATED OIL FOUND: NEWEST BEVERAGE CRAZE

Wasteland, USA--"Soda is the new oil," according to fashion impresario Tommy Hillfiger, remarking on the startling March 30th discovery by Calfrac creeps in Western Colorado of tar black cola seeping out of the holes they'd recently drilled.

"Where we used to find gobs of Texas Tea, now we find geysers full of A&W!" blurted Old Man Rivers, a supervisor for Calfrac, who overdosed on caffeine and had to be rushed to the hospital.

Not only has oil been usurped by a tasty yet unrefreshing inky black beverage, it seems that the fissures from which natural gas once seeped are now spouting a citrusy, transparent pop, similar to Sprite or Sierra Mist. "It's the durndest thing," says Ron Emmanuel, speaking via telephone from his office in the White House. "Sodey water dun popped out du groun'."

It didn't take long for the magnates of the fashion world to realize their opportunity to belittle and demean the masses of America. Louis Vuitton, designer of some utterly worthless, extravagantly-priced female accouterments, told his poodle dog, Fabio, on Sunday, "The World will rest in the crack of my butt!" This incident occurred just fifteen hours after the initial discovery of his plan to design a new hybrid that runs exclusively on soda, or at least pay someone to design it then slap his name on it.

Two hours later, from his lofty chateau tucked neatly away in the slopes of Aspen, Ralph Lauren, famous for his exceptionally unexceptional line of clothing, Polo, which is not only a style, but a way of life, revealed to his Arabian Stallion, "I Ride You, then You Ride Me" an all ready completed hybrid. "It only runs on the crystal clear soda, none of that mucky brown stuff," he explained.

Jody Lollipop and Little Timmy Strudel have been prancing through the fountain of sweet, sticky carbonated sugar water since the discovery on Tuesday and have no plans of leaving. They say they will one day get married and turn the once bleak oil field into a playground similar to the one in Pinnoccio before he and Lampwhick were turned into donkeys by the evil ringmaster who bore a striking resemblance to Dick Cheney (not that anyone cares about him anymore).•

HARMON WINS NOBEL PRIZE

At a ceremony held by the Swedish Academy on April 1st, Gary Harmon, columnist for The Daily Sentinel, was awarded the 2010 Nobel Prize in Chemistry for proving that water actually increases dehydration. The Swedish Academy, famous for such inventions as blond people, snow, ABBA, neo-classical power metal guitarist Yngwie Malmsteer, neo-classical ABBA power snoozers Ace of Base, Dolph Lundgren and the USA's favorite political tool: the stockholm Syndrome, said the importance of the discovery warranted immediate action. "We had to have the celebration as soon as possible," explained the ghost of Par Lagerkvist, 1951 Nobel Laureate in Literature and one of the Academy's immortals. "Drinking water is killing the people we love and if we want to stop this horror, we need to act as fast as possible. There's no time to lose in the war on water."

Harmon, a resident of Grand Junction, Colorado, intellectual capital of the cosmos, made his groundbreaking discovery while drinking a cup of coffee after watching a local barrista brew it. Having just hiked to the top of Mount Garfield and back down, Harmon was burning with thirst when he stumbled upon a man with a portable coffee cart, apparently just hanging out in the foothills beneath the Bookcliffs. Gary approached the natty-headed samaritan, who stirred up a cup of his finest Bulvarian for the dwindling journalist, then vanished into thin air with these words: "It will only make you thirstier."

Harmon, comprehending the incredible truth in the warning and realizing that coffee is essentially the synthesis of two separate elements—coffee grounds and water—into one and also seeing that the grounds are in fact absent from the final product, came to the conclusion that it must be the water that causes the depletion of H2O from the body.

Now considered by many to be the world's leading alchemist, Harmon, sporting a fresh tattoo reading, "COINTELPRO 4 Life," stated in his acceptance speech, "We must do whatever it takes to stop the ghouls for water!"•

MCCAIN HOLDS MISSING LINK

For years, people have been looking for a missing link, that is, a living bridge between animals and man. Anthropologists and theologians have an ongoing debate if such a thing exists at all. The problem is, they have been focusing on apes. To understand the missing link, we must look at the man-fish connection between the Moray Eel and Senator John McCain.

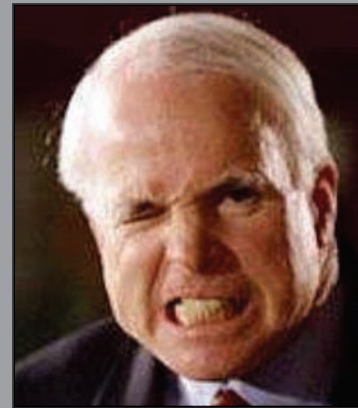

Both prefer living in caves, with their backs against the wall, which enables them to quickly lash out at passerbys; both have voracious appetites for meat (John McCain once ate 148 pork chops at an Iowa Caucus rally); both are solitary predators with no use for friends or a social life.

Of course, the truly striking comparison is the muscular jowls both possess. The only other animal that comes close in jowl size is the extinct Tyrannosaurus Rex. Which interestingly enough, both McCain and Morays are distant cousins of.

Thus far, McCain has refused the telltale DNA tests that would provide tale of the tape. Just how human is McCain? Does he have gills?

These are questions that need to be answered about our Senators. •

You Decide!

TEXANS DECLARED INVASIVE SPECIES

Colorado Division of Wildlife's spokesperson, Katie Haller, said today that the department has declared Texans to be an invasive species. "They are a drain on our culture, on our economy, and on our ecosystems," Haller said.

Similar to other non-native invasive and destructive species like Tamerisk, Russian Boar, and Pine Beetles, Texans use to many resources, destroy the land base, and kill trees. "They also have huge carbon footprints, and not to mention road-hunting," said Haller. Every fall large numbers of Texans migrate north to hunt native Coloradan animals like deer, elk, and bears. But they road hunt, or drive around and shoot animals from their trucks, which is illegal in Colorado. "We've gotten more and more complaints, about that and the gas wells. They're everywhere," said Holler.

Like other invasive species, residents are encouraged to clear any Texans from their property. On public lands, like Russian boar, it's open kill season.

Though Texans still have rights as American Citizens in Colorado, while on public land they are considered open game. "It's just gotten to the point where we need to choose between the Texans and our way of life. I think the DOW made the right choice," said state congressman Mike Johnson (R). Johnson has made a name for himself in Republican circles for justly calling for a border fence to be built around the state. "This is a good start, but we need to really think about listing Californians and anyone from the east coast as invasives species," said Johnson. •